> quered laziness, once and forever. I oliteness Toward Children. Many parents who are polite and polshed in their manners toward the world at large, are perfect boors inside the home-ircle. What wonder if the children are the same? If a man should accidently brush against another in the street an apology should be sure to follow, but who thinks of offering an excuse to the little people whose rights are constantly being violated by their cartless elders? If a stranger offers the slightest service, he is gratefully thankat such a time and under such circum ed; but whoever remembers to thus restances, after forcing the fight, is not a ward the little tireless feet that are traveling all day long up stairs and down on countless errands for somebody? It would be policy for parents to treat their
